Heat and glo gas fireplace models

Photo Courtesy: Daniela Duncan/Moment/Getty Images The COVID-19 pandemic has found many Americans spending more time at home than ever before. So, as we navigate the cold winter months, why not make this the year you transform your living room or den into a cozy oasis? While the idea of redesigning your home to install a traditional fireplace may not hold a ton of appeal, opting for a gas fireplace is a much easier alternative. Gas fireplaces offer the same allure as wood-burning fireplaces, but they're safer, cheaper and way easier to maintain. It's time to get cozy! How to Choose a Gas Fireplace When choosing a gas fireplace, remember that, like any appliance, there are features to look for and things to avoid. While perusing, you'll want to consider vents, installation style and what kind of fuel your selection burns. Need some help? We've got you covered. Photo Courtesy: sturti/E+/Getty Images Here's a quick breakdown: Vent Type: If you're buying an insert to transform a traditional fireplace into a gas one, then you may come across natural vent style options. These types of inserts are designed to work with your existing masonry, sometimes in combination with a pipe or liner that's installed through your chimney. Direct vent fireplaces, on the other hand, can be vented through a wall or up through the roof of your house. Finally, there are vent-free fireplaces, which automatically clean hot air as it leaves the fireplace, eliminating the need for a chimney or ventilation system altogether. Freestanding v. Insert: It's important to decide whether you're looking for a fireplace that comes inside a pre-built case or one that's just an insert. Inserts can either be worked into pre-existing wall indentations or used as a base for new masonry to be built around. Fuel Type: Gas fireplaces are designed to work with different types of fuels — namely natural gas or propane. Indoor v. Outdoor: You'll soon discover that there are many great options for both indoor and outdoor gas fireplaces. For safety reasons, make sure you know which environment your fireplace was intended for before you buy it. Additionally, while it's entirely possible to install a gas fireplace yourself, don't hesitate to contact a professional. There's nothing worse than damaging your home with a DIY project gone terribly wrong! Under $300: Peterson Real Fyre Oak Log Set If you're looking for a gorgeous gas fireplace that won't break the bank, feast your eyes on the Peterson Real Fyre, a 24-inch oak log set that comes complete with a vented burner and gas connection set. This natural gas fireplace's artificial logs have been crafted to look beautifully realistic, but, because the logs are made from superior refractory ceramics, they'll retain their heat even after the burner is off. Photo Courtesy: Peterson/Amazon Under $400: ProCom Ventless Gas Firebox Insert If you're worried that your living room may not have enough room for a fireplace, then check out this ProCom Ventless Gas Firebox Insert option, which is a great choice for tight areas. You can choose to position it in an existing wall recess or cabinet — or, if you're feeling extra crafty, you can even build a custom unit around it. While it comes with a draw screen and hood, do be aware that the log set and gas line and hookups need to be purchased separately. Photo Courtesy: ProCom/Home Depot Under $500: Bluegrass Living Vent-Free Natural Gas Fireplace This Bluegrass Living Vent-Free Natural Gas Fireplace Insert is a great choice for a zero-clearance natural gas fireplace insert. It comes with 5 hand-painted ceramic fiber logs, a ceramic fiber brick liner, and thermostatic control for adjusting the heat. Its classic arch-style makes for a cozy, classy addition to any room. Capable of a heat output of up to 10,000 BTU's/hr, it's a great way to save money on heating bills. Photo Courtesy: Bluegrass Living/Home Depot Under $600: Pleasant Hearth Vent-Free Gas Stove Whether you're looking for a great natural gas or liquid propane-based option, then check out this gorgeous Pleasant Hearth Vent-Free Gas Stove. This one is a great option if you're not into having a traditional fireplace mantle or hearth, but want that cozy cabin feel instead. Best of all, this state-of-the-art vent free technology does not require a flue or chimney, making it an ideal choice for warming your home. Photo Courtesy: Pleasant Hearth/Amazon Under $1,500: Bluegrass Living Vent-Free Stainless Outdoor Gas Fireplace Insert If you've always dreamed of having the most beautiful outdoor patio area on the block, then the Bluegrass Living Vent-Free Stainless Outdoor Gas Fireplace Insert may be just the choice for you. This 32-inch outdoor fireplace insert is designed with a sloped H-burner and a reflective interior that creates a gorgeous effect for the fireplace owner who wants both warmth and ambiance. While designed to use natural gas, a liquid propane conversion kit is also included. Photo Courtesy: Bluegrass Living/Home Depot Under $4,000: Cal Flame Propane Gas Outdoor Fireplace If you want to completely transform your backyard into a cozy oasis, look no further than this Cal Flame Propane Gas Outdoor Fireplace. Crafted from amethyst stucco and two-tone porcelain tile, this beautiful, dome-shaped fireplace is sure to elevate any outdoor space. Just attach a liquid propane tank and you're good to go. As an added bonus, it also comes with eight realistic-looking logs and lava rocks. Yet, anyone who has spent any time shopping for one understands that not all heaters are created equally. You want a heater that's designed to fit your needs, look great in your space and work within your lifestyle. This isn't an investment to rush into. Before you shell out your money and install one in your home, read this guide to make sure you're getting the best gas heater for your needs.Know If You Need a Gas HeaterYou might think that a gas heater could work well in your space, but is the heater made for it? As you research your options, you'll soon realize that gas heaters are categorized by their heating capacities. This is true for older models, secondhand gas heaters and those you buy new. While this has much to do with the size of a room they're designed to warm, the rating also measures how quickly they emit heat. Some gas heaters, most notably portable and unflued ones, don't work in a particularly small space. The reason? They produce emissions that could be harmful if there isn't enough air circulating in the area. If it's quick heating you're looking for, you'll need as large of a model as possible, but you need to make sure the space is large enough to disperse any off gassing. Take an inventory of your space and determine if a gas heater is ideal for it. If so, you're ready to compare specifics.Determining the Right SizeNaturally, you want to get the biggest gas heater for your money, right? Not so fast. It's easy to spend a fortune on an oversized one, thinking it'll pump out hot air like a champ and work like a powerhorse. But don't forget the fact that it can also be a costly and unnecessary expense. Conversely, the opposite also holds true. In an effort to save a few bucks, you could opt for a model that's far too small for your needs. Peruse gas heater reviews and other resources to understand the kWh heat output rating of each model you're considering. As a rule of thumb, one kWh will heat a space of around 10 square meters. You'll also need to take into consideration the climate where you live, how tall your ceilings are, your home's current level of insulation and how much direct sunlight the area gets in order to understand what size of gas heater you require.Choosing Between Flued or PortableThere are two main types of gas heaters you'll select between when choosing yours. One is a flued gas heater, and the other is a portable model. The former works via the installation of a flue that runs from your gas heater to the outdoors, allowing exhaust gas to travel outside of your home. While it can be an effective solution, it also requires construction, meaning that it's not ideal if you're renting or are in a space temporarily. As an alternative, you can go with a portable gas heater that's unflued. As implied, one benefit of this type is that you can move it from room to room, store it away when it's not in use and bring it with you when you move. Portable heaters also produce quicker, more direct heat than their flued counterparts. Moreover, though they may cost you more at the onset, they're cost-effective to run and can save you money on gas heater maintenance in the long-term. On the other hand, a flued gas heater is more efficient at removing harmful emissions. You can also use this type in spaces where portable models can't usually work, including bedrooms and bathrooms.What to Look For in a Portable HeaterWhether you ultimately go with a flued option or a portable one is determined by your usage requirements. There are specific elements you should look for in each model. With a portable gas heater, look for one that operates via convection. These include a fan to speed up the movement of hot air and often come equipped with a remote control to help you regulate the temperature. The alternative is a radiant-convection model, which works in a similar manner but uses an exposed panel to emit heat in a room. These can be cheaper to buy but often don't have automated add-ons, such as thermostats. What to Look For in a Flued HeaterIf you're shopping for a flued gas heater, look for one that comes equipped with a thermostat, remote control, programmable timer and electronic ignition. These are often integrated with smart home apps to make them as effective and usable as possible. Depending on the model you select, you can expect to spend between $400 and $2,500 on your new gas heater. Take the time to research your options, understand your space limitations and engage the assistance of professional gas heater installation services as you move forward. Then, you'll be able to comfortably and confidently relax in your newly warm space. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET
